Abstract: The study analyzed the data collected from 734 police officers in metropolitan Taiwan using standardized instruments. Results fill the gap in the research literature by exploring the impact of critical incident exposures on officers' mental health outcomes and clarifying the role of resilience and mental-help seeking attitude as moderators on this effect from a non-Western country.
- 2021 — 2024 Project: Do War-On-Gang Declarations Combat Crime? An Interrupted Time-Series Analysis (2011-2018).

Abstract: Based on deterrence theory, it is possible that the declarations deter crime by increasing the objective and perceptive severity and certainty of punishments and reducing would-be offenders' intention to offend. This study measures the size and duration of deterrent effects of two separate war-on-gang declarations adopted in Taiwan in 2012 and 2014. We performed interrupted time-series analyses to explore the effects of the war-on-gang declarations on monthly crime rates between 2011 and 2018 in a metropolitan city in Taiwan.
